

Recruiting Student Assistants (Current Graduate Students)

Michigan Developmental Disabilities Institute

WAYNE STATE UNIVERSITY

To work on LOCAL AND STATEWIDE RESEARCH PROJECTS

The Michigan Developmental Disabilities Institute (MI-DDI) on Wayne State University's midtown campus, is a federally mandated program that provides education, community support, research, and information dissemination on developmental disabilities. MI-DDI's mission is to contribute to the development of inclusive communities, self-determination, and self-advocacy, and to enhance the quality of life for people with disabilities and their families. This mission is implemented through the Institute's many local and statewide projects to address the life span issues in disability. MI-DDI is seeking graduate students in human services (social work, psychology, etc.), education, public policy, or allied health professions who are bright, energetic self-starters to assist in various research projects. This position requires a minimum of 10 hours per week and the possibility of up to 20 hours per week.

MI-DDI projects seeking student assistants include the Community Transition Trainer Project.
